The members of the class occupied seats on the platform, which was adorned with flowers. The walls were decorated with the national colors and the Marine Band played a number of patriotic airs, so that the occasion was not without that flavor of love of country which is emphasized in the instruction given in the public schools. The band played a number of selections and then the invocation was delivered by Rev. Charles A. Stakely. Superintendent Powell, with a few appropriate remarks, introduced Mr. John T. Mitchell, the president of the board of trustees, as the presiding officer of the evening.

MR. MITCHELL'S HAPPY SPEECH.

Mr. Mitchell made a happy little speech in board to enlarge the scope of the manual training given in the public schools to the extent that it seemed desirable. He thought that the demand of the present time was for more hands and, perhaps, fewer heads. The aim of this school is to the school in the first school in the school in school is to fit young men and women to be practical workers and he believed that the business community would be satisfied with the results. It was proposed to make the diplomas issued from this school valuable in the business world, so that when an applicant came to a business man for employment and had a diploma of this school that would be all the reference and indorsement that would be re-MR. ISADORE SAKS' ADDRESS.

The address to the graduating class was delivered by Mr. Isadore Saks and was a plain, ractical talk full of sound advice. In the outset he explained he had been asked by Mr. Davis, the principal of the school, to come up and give the boys a talk. Mr. Davis failed to say anything about the girls. Mr. Saks said he say anything about the girls. Arr. Saks said he was used to talking to young men, and, while there were ladies employed in his establishment, he never talked to them. After this little pleasantry Mr. Saks proceeded with his talk and displayed a decided ability in making a speech that was interesting not only to the boys and the girls, but also to the audience. He said that good help in business was always needed. He had employed graduates of the High School and found them to be among the best employes he ever had. But they had acquired the Washington fever for government employ and had dropped out of business. If a young man got a start in a busi-ness house, even though it was at the lowest point, there was no telling where he would end.

THE POSSIBILITIES IN A BUSINESS CAREER. The possibilities were very great and lay within the grasp of each individual. All advancement depended on the individual, whether he was faithful and diligent. Mr. Saks said that it was impossible to keep a good man down. There was in business, he said, room for the ladies who canted to work. He warned young men about their associations and said that evil companions had effect on character and on conduct. He spoke of the importance of honest truthful dealings and said that if a man started from the foundation of good principles that he would endure where men apparwithin the grasp of each individual. All adconclusion he hoped that each one of the grad-uates would obtain success by earning it. Mr.

The band played a number of the flag and pole on behalf of the school in one of the was before he could get the public schools.

Mr. Mitchell made a happy little speech, in which he emphasized the importance of this branch of the instruction given in the public schools. The main purpose, he said, in establishing the school was to open the way for those unable through lack of means to continue the academic course, to fit themselves to become at once producers. He expressed regret that the appropriations were not sufficient to enable the board to enlarge the scope of the manual train.

Mr. Geo. E. Howard, state councilor of Virginia, was the chief marshal of the parade, Messrs. E. W. Hambleton, S. W. Deckman, T. H. Powers, W. W. Hall, E. A. Reid, J. Schofield, Jr., and W. L.
